HOW A PATIENT'S HEALTH CARE IS FUNDED

Australian health care funding is complex.

Key funders in the health system as it relates to this guide include:

1. the Commonwealth Government through Medicare;
2. Private Health Insurance (PHI); and
3. the patient (commonly known as 'Out-of-Pocket' costs).

Federal, State and Territory Governments fund public hospitals which provide free admitted services to public patients.

These services are not the focus of this guide.

To avoid surprises when it comes to settling medical bills, it is useful to understand which parts of medical fees are covered by each of the three key funders.

This guide is designed to help patients work with their doctors to understand what they may have to pay for their medical treatment.

Medicare

The Medicare Benefits Schedule (the MBS) is a list of the medical services (known as MBS items) for which the Commonwealth Government will pay a Medicare rebate, to provide patients with financial assistance towards the costs of their medical services.

Generally, Medicare pays a benefit of:

- 100% for consultations provided by a General Practitioner (GP)
- 85% for all other services provided by a medical practitioner in the community; and
- 75% for all services that are provided by a medical practitioner during an episode of hospital treatment when the patient is admitted as a private patient.

The MBS was not designed to cover the full cost of medical services, MBS items have not been indexed (increased) for a number of years.

Any 'gap' between the MBS rebate and the doctor's fee and any hospital fees ends up being paid by other funders such as private health insurers or the patient.

Private Health Insurance

Private health insurance covers some, or all, of the cost difference between a doctor's fee and the MBS benefit (rebate) for services delivered to privately insured patients admitted into hospital (which can include a day hospital).

Private health insurance is complex – there are more than 70,000 variations in policies.

The amount covered by the insurer varies by insurer, State or Territory, policy, hospital location, and doctor.

Each insurer has their own schedule of benefits they pay, but this is not always publicly available.

For hospital treatments, the benefit amount paid to the patient will depend on arrangements in place between the insurer and the doctor, as well as the insurer and the hospital where a patient receives their treatment. But the law requires that private health insurers must pay 25% of the MBS fee outside of a no or known gap agreement.

There are three common misunderstandings about private health insurance and private hospital treatment:

1. Private health insurance policies cover every medical treatment – this is not true of all policies.
2. All policies remain the same over time – what is covered by a purchased policy can change.
3. If I have private health insurance, I don't need to pay anything else – patients will sometimes have out-of-pocket costs, even when their policy includes the medical treatment they need.

From 1 April 2019, the Commonwealth Government introduced new rules to help make private health insurance simpler and easier for people to understand.

Four new tiers of hospital cover began rolling out from early 2019 and will become mandatory from 1 April 2020. All hospital insurance policies must be classified using the terminology Gold, Silver, Bronze or Basic. Policies that cover more than the minimum requirements can be called '+’ policies, e.g., Bronze+ or Silver+.

What is, and is not, covered in these tiers is based on new minimum standard categories of treatment. These standard categories are groups of what hospital treatments are, and are not, covered under each policy. Each standard category – for example, ‘bone, joint and muscle’ category, or ‘heart and vascular system’ category – sets out the hospital treatments that must be covered by your private health insurer. If a policy covers a certain category, then it must cover everything listed in it – not only some things.

MEDICAL AND HOSPITAL COSTS

Doctor Fees

Outside of public hospitals, most medical services are provided in a free market. In Australia, doctors, like other highly trained professionals, are free to decide how much they charge for their services. The fee charged includes the value they place on their own professional skills, and their expertise to determine what they believe is fair and reasonable for the services they provide to each patient. A doctor's fee also needs to take into account the costs of running a practice, including insurance, wages, rents, and equipment costs.

Doctors are not required to charge fees that are equal to the MBS fee, and many don't.

Doctors should have a billing policy for their practice, which includes:

- when payment is required;
- any discounts available for early payment or charges for late payment;
- acceptable forms of payment; and
- the name and contact details of a nominated person to discuss payment issues and problems.

Doctors should also have a cancellation policy, which is clearly communicated to patients before or at the time of booking an appointment.

Appropriate patient billing

All professional medical services provided should be billed, itemised, and described with the applicable MBS item. For services where there is no MBS item, a relevant item from another schedule such as the AMA List of Medical Services and Fees should be billed.

A single episode of care or medical service should not be subject to a booking fee or a split bill.

The practice of 'booking fees' and split billing is not supported and may breach a medical practitioner's agreement with the private health insurer. This includes where fees are not linked to an MBS or AMA fee item or part of a single bill.

Patients have the right to ask for an estimate of fees before they receive the service or agree to a proposed treatment.

Medical practitioners are legally able to request prepayment from a patient for a procedure, this is not the same as a booking fee or split billing. Medical practitioners should keep the time between prepayment and procedure to a minimum to reduce negative impacts on patients. The patient should also be made aware that they will not be able to make a claim in respect of that payment until the procedure has actually happened.

For services delivered in a hospital, the amount that a private health insurer may decide to pay is based on their own medical benefits schedules and may not represent the amount a doctor may believe is appropriate to charge as a fee.

Out-of-hospital (outpatient) medical care as a private patient

Outpatient services are a common part of many people's treatment. Typical outpatient services include visiting a medical specialist at their practice or having pathology and radiology tests done.

Health insurers do not pay any benefits for outpatient services – if they are a private patient these are funded by the patient and in part by the MBS rebate (85% of the scheduled fee).

Sometimes this outpatient service may be billed at Medicare rebate level (rebate only or bulk-billed). When the Medicare rebate is less than the doctor's fee, the patient will have out-of-pocket costs after being reimbursed by Medicare.

Hospital treatment and fees

Public patients

All Australians can access inpatient (in-hospital) treatment as a public patient in a public hospital free of charge, as these services are funded by both Commonwealth and State/Territory governments.

However, public hospital patients are not able to choose the hospital they are admitted to or the doctors who will treat them. There can also be wait times for non-emergency services.

If there is an outpatient component of the public hospital treatment, the patient may need to make a payment towards the service.

Private patients

Private Hospitals are available to all Australians who wish to pay to use their services.

Everyone's situation is unique, and how much a person pays depends on:

- if they have private health insurance;
- if their insurance covers the treatment – some basic policies do not provide much cover;
- the arrangement the doctor has with the patient's insurer to provide the service, such as a no gap arrangement or known-gap arrangement (see page 7 for more details); and
- the specific arrangements between the hospital and the health fund.

When a person has hospital treatment as a private patient, Medicare will pay 75% of the MBS fee for the service provided. If they have private health insurance, the insurer must pay at least 25% of the MBS fee, unless they agree to pay more.

Health insurance policies are expensive. It is important to be aware that a policy may not cover all aspects of treatment, or all costs.

If you are uncertain about the level of rebate from your private health insurer that applies to your medical service, you should contact your insurer with the relevant MBS item number provided by your doctor.

HOW OUT-OF-POCKET COSTS CAN ARISE

An out-of-pocket cost arises when the amount covered by the MBS, and/or private health insurance, does not cover the full fee for a service.

Not all insurance policies cover all procedures, which can also result in out-of-pocket costs.

Some doctors will have arrangements with insurers that can affect out-of-pocket costs, including:

- 'no-gap' arrangement - where the doctor has agreed with the insurer to only bill the patient the amount the insurer has set for that particular service – the patient has no out-of-pocket costs; and
- 'known-gap' arrangement, which allows the doctor to charge a set amount (usually up to $500) above the insurer's agreed amount that they will pay – the patient pays this 'known gap' amount as an out-of-pocket cost.

When there is no arrangement between a doctor and an insurer, or the doctor charges more than the known-gap arrangement, a patient's out-of-pocket costs can significantly increase.

MBS benefits and private health insurance rebates have not kept pace with inflation. Doctors' costs (which include rent, electricity, staff wages, supplies and insurance) have continued to increase and this disparity also gives rise to increasing out of pocket costs for individuals.

This is because the insurer will only pay the minimum benefit amount required - 25% of the MBS fee. Lower benefits paid by the insurer mean higher out-of-pocket costs. If not communicated early, this can be confusing for patients.

Table 1 shows the different types of payments that patients who hold private health insurance may have (no gap, known-gap, no arrangement).

However, patients should be aware that even if they opt to be treated as a private patient in a public hospital, they may end up with some additional charges.

Using total hip replacement (MBS item 49318, MBS fee $1317.80) as an example, the table shows the three billing and payment scenarios where the doctor's fee is more than the MBS schedule fee.

Table 1: Three payment scenarios for total hip replacement (MBS 49318)*

	Doctor's fee	MBS rebate (75%)	PHI medical benefit	Out-of-pocket cost
Doctor accepts the PHI medical benefit amount at no gap	$2,092.80	$988.35	$1104.45	$0.00
Doctor accepts PHI known-gap arrangement	$2,592.80	$988.35	$1104.45	$500.00
No arrangement - the PHI benefit amount does not cover the doctor's fees	$2,615.00	$988.35	$329.45	$1,297.20

*Table is based on hypothetical doctor's fees for a single service only. Additional, associated service charges are not included (i.e anaesthetist and surgical assistant fees).

Whether a patient receives the full rebate versus the default 25% is also dependent on arrangements made by the insurer and may vary depending on choice of doctor and choice of hospital.

WHEN MEDICAL FEES CAN CHANGE

Sometimes a treatment plan needs to change, either during the operation, or over the course of treatment. Unexpected changes in a treatment plan may change the services delivered and therefore the amount the patient is required to pay. Any changes to the treatment plan should be discussed in advance, if possible.

It is important to remember you may have more than one doctor involved in treating you – such as a surgeon, an assistant surgeon, an anaesthetist, plus any doctors handling any pathology or diagnostic imaging.

For a complete picture of your potential out of pocket costs, you should ensure that every doctor or health professional involved in your care provides you with an estimate of their fees.

Summary of where out-of-pocket medical costs can arise:

- known-gap arrangements between doctors and private health insurers – out-of-pockets will be up to an agreed amount (usually up to $500)
- no arrangements with private health insurer – doctor's fee is greater than the private health insurer rebate
- outpatient services (i.e pathology tests, diagnostic imaging)
- treatment as a private patient in a public hospital
- a private health insurance policy does not cover the full cost of MBS services
- services billed for are not linked to MBS or AMA schedules; and
- non-MBS items are billed for (i.e a facility fee).

EXCESSIVE FEES

Excessive fees - fees that the majority of a doctor's peers would consider to be unacceptable are not supported by the medical profession.

It is important to remember that a doctor charging high medical fees is not necessarily providing a higher quality of health care than that provided by other doctors.

Furthermore, the practice of charging a second, separate bill - often known as a 'booking fee' or a split bill - for medical services is not supported.

Many medical colleges, associations and societies have taken it upon themselves to set up complaints processes to support consumers, and consumers are encouraged to contact these organisations if assistance is required.

DISPUTING REIMBURSEMENT WITH A PRIVATE HEALTH INSURER

When submitting invoices to private health insurers for reimbursement, it is helpful to include a cover sheet listing the date of the bills, the provider's name, MBS items billed, and the total amount of the bill. When reimbursement is made, the private health insurer will send the patient a summary of bills paid and the total amount reimbursed. If a bill is rejected, there is normally a short explanation for the rejection.

If a patient has submitted a bill to an insurer that they think should have been reimbursed, but was rejected, they should talk to the insurance company and ask for a more detailed explanation for the rejection.

Most private health insurers will have employed agents to help in settling these disputes. It never hurts to ask how much help they are able to offer.

Some doctors are paid directly by the health insurers, and some have an agency that does their billing for them.

Doctors and patients are encouraged to be aware of the advice provided by the Private Health Insurance Ombudsman on medical billing, and what consumers can do when a medical bill is much higher than expected.

INFORMED FINANCIAL AGREEMENT

An agreement between a doctor and a patient

The doctor-patient relationship is a partnership. Working together, we can achieve better health care outcomes. The relationship is built on mutual respect, communication, and trust.

This means that both parties ask questions and provide information to agree on a treatment plan, together.

This section provides general information on how to understand what an episode of medical treatment might cost. This is known as an 'informed financial consent' between a patient and their doctor.

There are a range of circumstances where a doctor may find it difficult to provide full informed financial consent. These include in a medical emergency or if there is an unexpected complication.

The Commonwealth Government amended the rules for private health insurance so that from 1 April 2020 Private hospital cover will be classified in 4 tiers – Gold, Silver, Bronze or Basic.

What is, and is not, covered in these tiers will be based on new minimum standard clinical categories. Clinical categories are types of hospital treatments described in a standard way. The higher the tier, the more categories it covers.

If your health insurer covers a category – for example, 'bone, joint and muscle' or 'heart and vascular system' – they must cover all of the treatments in that category including an unplanned treatment that is provided as part of a planned surgery.

Further information on these reforms can be found at: <https://beta.health.gov.au/health-topics/private-health-insurance/about-private-health-insurance>

Good informed financial consent can help remove any surprises from medical costs, and help a patient understand where medical fees can come from. Ultimately, informed financial consent outlines what a patient may have to pay for medical services.

If doctors have a financial interest in the facility carrying out the medical care, this must be disclosed to the patient. Good informed financial consent should include disclosure to patients of any interests in matters related to their care, including financial interests in facilities utilised or financial gain from the use of devices.

WHAT HAPPENS AT A SPECIALIST MEDICAL CONSULTATION?

A medical specialist is a doctor who is an expert in a specific area of medicine. GPs typically refer patients to medical specialists for further treatment. To give them more options, patients can ask their GP to recommend a number of specialists.

Specialists work in clinics, public and/or private hospitals.

When booking the initial consultation with the specialist, patients should ask about the cost, noting Medicare only pays for a portion of most initial consultations.

It is important that patients understand everything the specialist tells them. It is a good idea for patients to ask questions, take notes, or have a support person.

At a specialist consultation, the specialist and patient (and/or the patient's support person) may talk about:

- the patient's personal and family medical history;
- current symptoms the patient may be experiencing;
- the patient's lifestyle factors such as diet, exercise, hobbies, and generally how they are feeling every day;
- medication being taken, including over-the-counter medicines and nutritional/herbal supplements; and
- any side effects the patient may have from their medicine/s.

The treating specialist will then discuss their diagnosis with the patient and give a recommendation on appropriate treatment options available. This could include the need for surgery, medication, or ongoing monitoring with the patient's regular GP.

It is also a good idea to talk about costs at a patient's first visit. It is important that a patient's GP is aware of the treatment plan decided with the specialist. This ensures high-quality, continuity of care.

Patients should be aware that not all medications, tests and treatments are subsidised by the Government and this is not under the control of their medical practitioner. When ordering or prescribing such tests, medicines or treatments, patients should be informed clearly that there is no rebate available.

Ongoing or long-term care

Many patients have ongoing or chronic illnesses and see medical practitioners regularly – this can result in cumulative out-of-pocket expenses and increased financial stress. Medical practitioners should inform patients about the cost of each visit and should review this information at appropriate intervals.

QUESTIONS TO ASK YOUR DOCTOR

This is a sample list of questions you may wish to ask your doctor:

- What are your fees?
- Are there any fees for other doctors?
- Will I have any out-of-pocket costs?
- Is your fee an estimate only?
- Can I have an estimate of your fees in writing?
- If the cost changes, when will you let me know?
- What if I need a prosthesis/implant?
- Should I contact my health fund?

Remember: If you are unclear about the total costs of your treatment ask your doctor and your health fund.

WHAT IF SURGERY OR OTHER MEDICAL INTERVENTION IS REQUIRED?

Where surgical or other medical intervention (e.g. radiotherapy, ongoing consultations) is an option, it is important to discuss and agree:

- why is the operation or medical intervention needed;
- how the operation or medical intervention will be performed or provided, and where (e.g. hospital operating theatre, day hospital, consulting room);
- who will be part of the surgical or medical team (i.e. anaesthetist, assistant surgeon, physiotherapist, psychiatrist, medical oncologist etc.);
- what the risks, benefits, and possible complications for the operation or medical treatment are;
- what the patient will need to do before the operation/intervention, such as any tests, fasting or special diet, and ceasing any medication they may be taking;
- expected recovery time from surgery or medical intervention in terms of treatment, medication, diet, and home care, based on the patient's health status prior to the procedure being performed;
- what the post recovery plan is (e.g. physiotherapy, exercises at home);
- when the patient will be able to return to regular activities (e.g. work, driving, lifting, and exercise); and
- whether or not the patient has private health insurance, and the patient's ability to pay for the surgery or medical intervention.

DISPUTING A FEE WITH THE DOCTOR

Before a fee is charged by the doctor, the doctor and patient should come to an informed financial consent that outlines the cost estimate for each service provided, including the MBS item numbers.

It is a good idea for patients to keep records of their medical invoices. If a patient feels their charges were not agreed to, they should contact their doctor's office to discuss the reasons for the various charges, and why they are more than expected.
